

Commercial Crime & Fidelity Coverage

Help you can trust when crime strikes your business

When organizations consider the ordinary costs of doing business, payroll, equipment, stock, supplies, maintenance, insurance and other traditional factors top their lists. But for many businesses, one line item that may also belong on the list is the cost of crime.

According to the U.S. Government Accountability Office (GAO), researchers have estimated that the economic impacts of crime in America (from costs to anticipate and prevent crime to its direct financial consequences and societal response) could range from $690 billion to $3.4 trillion* annually. Whether the actual figure is at the lower or higher end of that range, there is little doubt that the impact of criminal acts on businesses – from employee theft and embezzlement to fraudulent acts and computer crime – can be a significant burden. A burden that may worsen in the future as wrongdoers use increasingly sophisticated technologies to exact a growing toll on corporate balance sheets.
